Mount Chicago is a captivating novel by Adam Levin that explores the themes of ambition, family, and dreams. Set against the backdrop of Chicago's vibrant history, the story follows the interconnected lives of four generations of the Cohen family, spanning from the Gilded Age to the present day.

The novel begins in 1893, at the dawn of the Gilded Age. Samuel Cohen, a young Jewish immigrant from Russia, arrives in Chicago with dreams of making his fortune. He starts out as a peddler, but soon builds a successful clothing business. As his wealth and status grow, Samuel becomes increasingly ambitious, determined to leave a lasting legacy for his family.

Samuel's son, Benjamin, inherits his father's ambition. He becomes a successful lawyer and politician, and eventually serves as mayor of Chicago. Benjamin is a charismatic and visionary leader, but he is also flawed. His ambition often leads him to make compromises that he later regrets.

Benjamin's son, David, is a more introspective and artistic soul. He becomes a writer and poet, but his career is overshadowed by his father's success. David struggles to find his own voice and place in the world.

David's daughter, Sarah, is the last of the Cohen line. She is a talented musician and singer, but she also struggles with depression and anxiety. Sarah's story is a poignant exploration of the challenges of mental illness and the search for meaning in life.

Mount Chicago is a multi-layered and compelling read that will resonate with readers long after they finish the last page. The novel is a rich tapestry of history, family, and human experience. It is a story about the American dream, the pursuit of happiness, and the sacrifices we make along the way.
